

Wolf Pack members make QA honor roll

By 1st Lt. Kelly Cahalan
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

The 8th Fighter Wing Quality Assurance section recently announced its first quarter superior performer honor roll.

Each quarter, the 8th QA conducts about 1,800 inspections, primarily focusing on the 8th Maintenance Squadron, the 35th Fighter Squadron, the 80th Fighter Squadron and the 8th Operations Support Squadron, according to Capt. Alex Dubovik, 8th QA chief.

Organizations are graded in three different areas:

Quality verification inspections examine completed work on aircraft, aircraft parts, munitions, or support equipment. Some tasks, such as engine installation, require inspection every time they’re performed. Other tasks have varying established inspection goals.

Special inspections examine items like tool boxes, aircraft forms and training records within the organization.

Personal evaluations evaluate personnel performing specific tasks, whether on aircraft on the flightline, aircraft parts in a back shop, or bombs in the munitions storage area.

The inspectors observe and evaluate adherence to technical orders and general maintenance practices, as well as proficiency in completing the task.

Once an individual passes four personal evaluations in a row with zero defects, their name is placed on the Quality Assurance Honor Roll.

“Our goal is to complete a minimum of 72 personal evaluations each month,” said Dubovik, “So the fact that someone is inspected at least four times and has performed each task error-free in one quarter means they’re both performing a lot of maintenance within their section, and they’re doing their job extremely well.”

The following people are on the Quality Assurance Honor Roll for the first quarter of 2001. They are listed by their names, the number of inspections and their Air Force Specialty Code.

Loring Club offers scholarships for club members, families

By the 8th Services Squadron marketing office

Air Force Clubs are running a special scholarship program for club members and their families. Applicants must fill out an entry form from the Air Force Services website <http://www-p.afsv.mil> submit a 500 word essay on “Air Force Clubs — The Value and Rewards of Membership,” and provide a single-page summary of their long term career/life goals and previous accomplishments. All entries must be submitted to your club’s cashier’s cage by July 1, 2001.

This year the Air Force Services Agency is giving away a combined total of $10,000 in scholarships to three lucky winners. All entries become the property of the Air Force Services Agency and may be used in marketing and/or publicizing the Club Membership Scholarship Program. Check out the Air Force Services website <http://www-p.afsv.mil> Scholarship information can be accessed under the “Clubs” heading. For more information call Don Montgomery, Loring Club Assistant Manager, 782-4312.
